

Bullying prevention and intervention

with Michael Sulkowski, PhD, University of Arizona

Up to 30% of students experience bullying, some as early as preschool, with detrimental side effects. This seminar addresses how mental health professionals, teachers, parents and others can prevent bullying and intervene when needed.

Thursday, Oct. 18, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Center for Health Education
(740 SW Ninth St, Newport)

Registration is recommended by calling 541-574-4954

In a free seminar, Michael Sulkowski, PhD, University of Arizona, shares his research on the consequences and long-term effects of bullying, both on the victim and the bully. His presentation will discuss at-risk and vulnerable populations, legal considerations, as well as bullying prevention and intervention best practices.

The author of “Creating Safe and Supportive Schools and Fostering Students’ Mental Health” and “Cognitive Behavioral Therapy in K-12 School Settings: A Practitioner’s Guide”, Sulkowski’s research focuses on how student success is influenced by social support, connectedness, and having positive personal relationships and how those variables facilitate resilience.
